STUDENTS' VOICES

Weather: The Fury Within

The sun— in the morning, lazily rose to drench the Earth in its warm, embracing light— especially, in the city of New York, where the flowers craved sunlight. The sky, blue like the ocean and filled with tranquility, now gathered all its fury— and began to darken. It almost seemed as if a cataclysm was about to strike. The wind howled loudly and tore through the enormous buildings, with their protruding lightning rods that pointed aggressively toward the sky. It also seemed as if it was futile to stop chanting...

First came a drop, and then came a heavy and enormous downpour that engulfed the city. The lake— once pristine and crystal clear— had now turned into a dark shade; probably caused due to the pollutants that ruled over the sky. The flowers, once fulfilled with their sunlight and blooming, now started to gasp for it. It seemed that the end was near.

In the dim light nearby, a figure was standing, with a raincoat that covered him. His eyes reflected the sinister storm. It seemed as if he could understand the storm and the storm could understand him. The uncanny figure remained there, gazing up towards the sky.

With each clap of thunder and each flash of lightning, it seemed as if a distant memory— or maybe a nightmare came closer. The entire city had been flooded. There was water in the lawns of houses, water in the sewers, water on the roads, and water on the streets.

The long, narrow snake—the street—was drenched in water, as if it had been raining since ages. The black sky, once pitch-black, began to recover after this wrath of nature. First came a narrow gleam of hope, and then a magnificent glow from the sky—the sun was now back into power, and the clouds, well, vanished into thin air...

From Curiosity to Creation: Hobby, a stepping stone

Today, we're going to explore something really exciting: model-building! Imagine building a mini version of something you see around you, like a car, a house, or even a spaceship! Just like when you play with building blocks, model-building helps us understand how things are made, how they work, and how they fit together. It's a way to use your creativity and problem-solving skills to create small-scale versions of real-life objects!

If you have been searching for a hobby, consider this one! It is fun, educational, not so expensive and good for you overall.

You can try to build models in your free time. You can either make your own from scratch or buy the kits. This hobby has tons of benefits.

Firstly, it increases your curiosity. As you work through the manual (if it is a kit) or play around with your ideas (if you do it on your own), you will get curious to see what comes out as the final result. I also firmly believe that you will want to know more about your model, so it will increase your curiosity as well as your knowledge about a particular subject. You can also find your passion or a subject that you are passionate about.

Secondly, it increases your hand-eye coordination. Hand-eye coordination is when you try to recreate, what you see from your eyes, from your hand. If you are making the model yourself, you try to replicate what you have pictured. If you are using a kit, then you recreate (correctly or incorrectly) what you see in the manual. Hand-eye coordination is a great skill for any task, so this hobby developing it is another plus point.

Thirdly, it sharpens young minds. As you navigate throughout the manual, you will also find some facts (or you can even research them). Also, when you build it, it sharpens your intelligence.

Fourthly, it improves your model building skills. If you want to become an inventor or scientist or builder, this skill will help you.

Lastly, it is a fun pastime hobby you can pursue when you are free, and you even get a model at the end.

If you are using a kit, I would recommend using Smartivity as they make easy and good kits with quality manuals and give all the supplies you need in the kit itself. The kits are also child friendly. I would also suggest picking a day you are free and a time you are ready to do the kit, and you are relaxed.

In conclusion, you can build models either with the kit or from scratch. But, this hobby has many positive skills which can help you your whole life. Hence, you should try it out, and if you like it, please continue with it.

What could possibly go wrong?

I tried to stay calm...

The stage fright took over me as I looked into the vanity mirror and saw myself. An epitome of perfection indeed! All my life, everyone had told me that I would become an auspiciously famous actor with my name etched into the Hollywood Walk of Fame thrice. We'll know that soon...

Cut back to that day; It was my first big stage performance and I had to live up to the expectations. I brought up my phone, took a selfie and posted it. No likes? Maybe in a minute... Still no likes?

I figured that it must've been an Internet fault while struggling to stay confident. I picked up my makeup and applied it as perfectly as I could because my makeup lady decided to "live life for a day or two" and she chose such a "small" day to do so. I still looked virtually as handsome and dashing as I should have been. Finally, I sat on my sofa and glanced once more at my lines.

"Jane... oh Jane... please do not leave. I..." I shrieked.

I paused as I realized the disaster that had left my vocal cords. I sounded awful. I had to calibrate my voice and do so quickly. "No! this was not the plan; why am I not prepared?" I screamed to myself. Oh God! What could possibly be worse than this? I thought.

Now I think God literally took this as a challenge and decided to show me how worse it could possibly be. "Do. Rae.. Mi... Fa.... So..... La..... Ti" I sang, trying to calibrate myself.

I was interrupted by another student that it was almost time for my entry. I rudely shut the door on his face and snapped, "I KNOW WHEN MY ENTRY IS, GO CRY ELSEWHERE!!". I am certainly not proud that I did this but at this point, God was definitely angry on me and I'd like to think that he applied Murphy's Law on me.

As I tried to open my door, I realized it was locked from the outside.

"No! NOO! NOOOO!, This just can't be happening!" I screamed, gradually reaching the top of my voice. It was Jeremy, it was him for sure... I panicked and started pushing the door which was when I heard a faint voice, "YES!!" I shouted; It was my director; but wait another voice?

"Why isn't he out yet?"

"He caught fever, so he left, sir!"

"On such an occasion; didn't expect that from him!"

Jeremy had just told my director that I went home and now he'll get my role. He'll get all the fame. "You cheeky, corrupted, pesky little..." I cursed him as loud as my throat could manage. I leaned onto the smooth tile wall as I glided towards the floor with a sense of misery.

My career is destroyed. What could possibly..."

I couldn't even complete that dirty little sentence and guess what? All the lights started flickering and then: Darkness! I passed out and woke up after the show. I only remember that the lights went out and when I woke up, they were up and working again. I checked my Instagram; Jeremy had posted about the show and the school newspaper too had the headline.

"Jeremy, the story of an unannounced destined hero"

I tore the newspaper into bits and pieces and looked for nooks and corners desperately. I ran to a corner and sobbed like a small baby as I stared into my not-so-bright future before passing out again.

That day I learned that life is unfair and there is no use in being scared because... when you do... nothing ever seems to go right.

Fate

Clouded mind, teary eyes
 Confused heart wondering of live
 I see no one here
 All alone in tears
 Burning heart with fate of ice
 Why do I have a fate like this?
 Purple stains on my heart
 Broken glasses all around
 Shattered dreams
 Laughing with a trampled heart
 Why am I sad when they smile?
 Maybe it's not them but me
 Surely it is me
 Too loud or too quiet
 Too anxious or too caring
 Unpredictable state
 Helpless soul
 Hiraeth heart
 Perfidious mind
 Everyone feels like cynefin to me
 Yet no place to return to
 He felt like a lacuna and
 I am too steeped in saudade to not stay stuck

Divyanshi Prasad- Grade 11 (IBDP)

Wish

Dumb little soul
 Thought someone would notice
 The tries, the efforts
 As if I even matter that much
 Love, fate, care
 Is all that rich could know
 My little penniless soul
 Knows the begged stolen crumbs of it
 It's all fine till my head starts hurting,
 Breath gets hitched, shaking hands,
 burning heart,
 Staining my soul more and more
 Shivering soul speak of warmth
 Like a scared wish
 Speaks of life like an incomplete dream
 Shattered dreams
 No one to hear the tale of life
 Nobody to share the jokes with
 Hitched breath, burning heart,
 Stained bruised soul
 Wondering of life
 Only to end up with durns

Divyanshi Prasad- Grade 11 (IBDP)

The Haunting Adventure

In the star-studded canvas of a night sky, with threads of fate weaving a tapestry of wonder, there lived three inseparable friends; Marcus, Eux, and Stella. They were very adventurous and considered their lives a never-ending rollercoaster of mischief and wonder.

One fine day, the summer vacation of Stella, Eux, and Marcus started and they looked forward to an adventurous season. Three of them decided to explore the dark and dense forest where mysteries had known to lie. Dangerous and spooky, especially at night, the forest was always a story waiting to unfold.

Three of the friends sneaked outside Eux's house and started to loiter hoping to find a path into the forest as the clock ticked, and the time flew away casting magic.

The weather started to become furious with trees swaying in a sync and the cotton candy-like clouds now transformed into fierce monsters growling at the three friends. Shiver ran down their spine as their legs started to become numb, they stood frozen in a spot, scared as if they had encountered a ghost. They shouted at the top of their lungs until their voice was hoarse, and soon they decided to get near the shimmering river. As they strolled further, they noticed a small house entangled with creepers. Although they were drowning in the flood of fear, the glint of hope kept glistening in their eyes as they moved towards the old, rusty house. The moment they stepped into the house, they felt a wave of hope rush through them. They were drowning in a sea of fear as their lifeboat of hope was sinking fast.

As they walked in the deafening hallway, they observed a small door which was half open. Inside the room, there was complete darkness. They started groping in the darkness, and then Stella's hand brushed against a stone. She informed the others, and when they stepped out of the room into the light, they observed the stone glistening and realized it was a precious and expensive diamond which was one in a million. It felt like a diamond in the rough. Happily, they went back inside the door and collected all the diamonds lying down, ready to welcome them. Once the room was empty, all three friends equally distributed the diamonds, and this vacation turned out to be their favourite one.
